

“Frosted” Amaryllis

Looking for something with impact for your customers entertaining friends or family over Christmas, well here’s an idea – Frosted Amaryllis. A combination of 3 simple colours, black, white and silver, with a little added ‘bling’!

Frosted Amaryllis provides a relatively simple yet striking piece for use in corporate work or those special dinner parties. The design can also work with the less costly gerbera, although we would recommend that the height is a little lower. Fresh or silk flowers, ceramic pots or glassware, all will work, but we like the decorative ribbons which we feel really enhances the luxurious feel to the arrangement.

We hope you have a successful festive season. Sam Plowman

1. Take the ceramic pot and cut the foam to fit snugly inside the pot, the height of the foam should be level with the rim. Stick a plastic floral foam pinholder to the base of the pot or place a metal pinholder into bottom of the container, and push the foam onto the holder.
2. Take three stems of Amaryllis, tie them together so that the heads are all together and then push the stems into the centre of the foam. See how good your eye is by trying to keep them as upright as possible.
3. Make some wire hairpins and cover the rest of the floral foam with the black sisal, so that the oasis is not visible.
4. Untie the amaryllis stems and cut two lengths of diamante ribbon, ensure there is enough to make a collar effect around the stems. Either glue in place, or attach the ribbon with some wire.
5. Make a bow out of the silver ribbon, and push into foam, take last stem of amaryllis, cut off the flower heads and attach a wire so that they can be pushed into the foam near the bow.
6. Attach two black butterflies, one to the mid-point of the stem and the other further down towards the base.
7. Your creation is complete!
